CAUSE OF EXPLOSION.

A Simple Thing That Made People Wonder What Had Happened.

People who happened to be walking along Pennsylvania street, between Market and Washington, Tuesday afternoon, were startled by a terrific explosion that sounded as if a cannon had been discharged in the neighborhood. Occupants of offices and stores in the vicinity rushed to windows and doors, poking their heads out timidly. and looked in every direction to discover the cause of the noise. An explanation of the loud report was made yesterday by John Wocher, between hearty laughs, which were evoked by thoughts of the uproar that was occasioned said Mr. Wocher, "that we are agents for a fire-alarm system for factories and office buildings and that our system employs what are called 'thermostats,' that is, appliances which are sensitive to a degree of heat that is dangerously near the point of combustion. Well, the man that invented | morning in a machine that amputation this appliance is over seventy years of was necessary. The new device is a little affair, shaped something like a bicycle bell, except that it is supplied with a wire loop by which to suspend it from the ceiling or any other place where one wants to put it. Then there is a tube projecting from the top of the device, and this tube contains a plug of some soft metal. Inside the 'bell' is a chemical that is converted into gas at a certain temperature.
